

Devlog 01

I am quite tired today.

I barely slept.

---

Honestly,

I was just too excited about designing.

---

On top of that,

it's 31°C here in France.

Even at night.

---

Our American teammates

are seven hours behind us.

Our Australian friends

are already several hours ahead.

So there's almost always someone awake somewhere.

---

Over the past few days,

I've been working on our projects.

---

I've browsed

an incredible number

of artistic websites,

luxury brands,
architecture studios...
trying to understand
what makes them
feel the way they do.

---

I've been running a ridiculous number of experiments.

---

Throwing ideas away.
Keeping a few.
Trying again.
Slowly figuring out
what Flying Fortress Games should actually look like.

---

And between all of that...
I'm still programming.

---

I run
on coffee
and passion.

---

So... what did we actually do?

---

We looked at posters.

Brochures.

Websites.

Boutiques.

---

We explored

the 1920s.

The 1950s.

And the latest trends.

---

We created clothing lines.

Advertisements

for games

that don't exist.

---

We even bought yachts.

For the characters.

Not for us.

---

Then we tested

our own ideas

against all those references.

---

It turns out that skeuomorphism

feels dated.

---

So we're going to try something else.

---

Something elegant.

Restrained.

Classy.